Why major in Foreign Language at Maryville College?

Majoring in a foreign language will help you become a better communicator and citizen of an increasingly global world. From understanding scholarly articles and literature written in other languages to proficiently communicating with people around the world, you will be prepared for a variety of challenges. Some graduates of our foreign language programs go on to work with people in the U.S. whose English proficiency is limited, while others work overseas in business, foreign relations, politics, teaching, research, missions, journalism and tourism. In addition to the languages in which you can major and minor, French, Italian and Latin are offered every semester. The catalog also allows for occasional offerings of Chinese, Greek and Hebrew. Wherever your path leads, the study of foreign languages will open doors in exciting ways.

MEET A CURRENT SCOT

Kat Vallero

Hometown: Athens, Tennessee

The student-focused nature and size of Maryville College drew Kat's interest in becoming a Scot herself. Majoring in a foreign language – Spanish with teacher licensure, in Kat's case – provides her with the opportunity to introduce other young adults to a new language and culture after she graduates with her degree.

"My long-term goal for the future is to get my master's degree and become a Spanish professor at a college!"

MEET A RECENT GRAD

Emily Huffstetler '24

Currently: Pursuing M.S. in Conservation Education at MSU; Founder & CEO of Build for Bees

Emily was introduced to the Spanish major at MC while she was a high school dual-enrollment student, and that inspired her to major in the language, instead of pursuing a minor. She triple-majored in Spanish, Writing/Communication and Design and earned her Certified Nonprofit Professional credential. All of these she now uses for her bee conservation nonprofit, Build for Bees.

Currently living abroad in Spain, Emily credits her study abroad experience as a student with helping her choose to make the leap across the Atlantic. In the fall, she'll start a master's degree program in Conservation Education from Mississippi State University while also working remotely. "So far, the stars are aligning. My undergraduate internship evolved into a full-time remote position, and my graduate program will also be remote, providing me the flexibility I need to live abroad," she said.
